

Dyft 21 Mai

Rapidly, Flappy and Wings flew breathlessly into munchy Money Supermarket car park. Speechless they both observed a building in equal wonder and fear at something they thought was the human eating monster however we all knew it was munchy money Supermarket. How would they find Baterella?

As they stood in front of the life threatening rotating doors their misery expanded. They thought they would get killed by these executing blades. They purely had to get through but they would have come face to face with risks, they must not be scared, still they had no idea how to achieve this impracticable mission. Instantly, Flappy saw her salvation, a woman was about to insert herself in to the grocery store. Her bag was open. This was their prospect! They must take this chance!

With one tremendous effort they both leapt inside the woman's bag. It was TARDIS like inside (bigger on the inside), stuffed with her own accessories, mobile phone devices and of course the bats! When both animals were eventually inserted both bats flew for freedom. Scared but also ready for adventure they observed their sight. They saw an arctic ice cupboard keeping pizzas frozen with no magic. Tins and cans were stacked in inter-linked rows. Nevertheless there was one certain horrifying object above their horizon was violent, crusty and offensive weapons. They were to hope the humans would never use them.

Baterella was gently gliding towards the shelves. To her satisfaction she saw she could be magic with disappeared apple juice, her perfect plan, an empty bottle of apple juice...! She had come near her objective with caution and waited and longed for quite a while to reach it. She flew like an angel on to someones head and jumped on to the shelf. She was ready to implement her super scheme before the customers noticed her. On the bottle. What was happening? Please no!...

Happy and Wings had got fed up. They had searched for hours and hours. Finally, they had stumbled upon what they were looking for. Overwhelmed, they ran closer and closer. To their terror they realised above their heads, something was not right. Baterella was shaking badly, on the highest shelf of the display. She was scared stiff, on top of a bottle, by what looked like a fear of heights but not just that... They both rapidly raced up to the shelves and waited for a human tall enough to reach the top shelf to come. Without them being noticed they flew onto the human's head, jumped onto the shelf and saw Baterella. They heaved and heaved and heaved Baterella on to the shelf. They tried to calm her down but there was no hope.

The two bats squeaked and squealed as they assisted Baterella out of the market. Luckily they managed to escape the horrible hell house of hades without being caught by the horrendous humans. As they emerged into the night sky, Baterella was secured no longer, she flew like an angel coming from heaven. The sometimes diabolical like devil now resembled sorrowful saint. Happy and Wings were now raged with anger as they yelled at her recklessness. To their surprise she apologized sympathetically for doing what she did. Her cousins were thankful but suspicious as they knew when she apologized it was never the end to a story.